TAKES EXCEPTION TO LETTER WRITTEN BY ANDY FRIED To the editor:

I want to thank my good friend Andy Fried for providing the laugh of the week in his open letter printed in last week's column of The Post with regard to Eph Levin's appointment for the 21st consecutive year as chairman of the nominating committee for the Indiana-Kentucky State Association of the B'nai B'rith.

The entire tone of Andy's letter reveals the ridiculousness of the situation that prevails in this extra-legal body. He says quite openly, "In the twenty-one years you have headed the nominating committee, in my humble opinion, you have picked some darn good And, that is just the presidents."

I don't believe the rank and file membership of the Indiana-Kentucky State Association relishes the idea of a czar who "picks" their officers for them. For, this creates a vicious circle whereby the president appoints a nominating and the nominating committee in turn, "picks" the presi-The fact that one-half of them have been "darn good" is beyond the point. It just isn't democratic procedure and stultifies the entire organization. We want to "pick" our own leadership no matter whether they are good or bad and personally I resent the implications attested to by our venerable Secretary-Treasurer that the control of the State Association has been, is, and always will be within the grasp of the small clique that has dominated its policies for the past twenty-one years.

We Jews are the first to complain about authoritarianism. We have seen its ugly counterpart operating in various countries of Europe ever since the exodus. Are we then to sit supinely back and permit a dictatorship to operate within the ranks of an or

Mr. Philip Slomovitz, The Jewish News Detroit, Michigan. My dear Mr. Slomovitz:

There passed over my desk recently a clipping from the Indianapolis Jewish Post, quoting an article reprinted from the "Jewish News" entitled "Smith's Jewish Backers."

This article states that "several leaders in the ranks of the Jewish War Veterans hugged him (Gerald L. K. Smith) to their bosoms." Further in the same paragraph at a meeting addressed by Smith "A leader among the Jewish war veterans cheered himself hoarse every time Smith attacked racial and religious pre-"War veteran" is repeated in another paragraph.

These references would tend to implicate the Jewish War Veterans of the United States in supporting the program of activities of Gerald L. K. Smith. Such an implication would be very severe and unjustified. It is contrary to the 47-year record of accomplishment in combatting anti-Semitism by our organization.

Upon the recent Federal indictment of William Griffin, Publisher of the "New York Inquirer, for a conspiracy to obstruct and defeat our war effort, one Benjamin Greenspan, a former Judge ran to the press defending Griffin as a friend of Jewry. Would the fact that the Greenspan release related that he had at one time been an officer of the American Jewish Congress, implicate the Congress in the attempted white-wash?"

In yesterday's New York Sun (and many other papers) there was reported a story of a soldier who did all the talking after being graciously given a lift by a lady in a limousine in London. By Jewish Telegraphic Agency JERUSALEM—Dr. J. L. Mag-nes, head of the Hebrew University and leader of the newly-formed political party "Ichud" which advocates closer contact with the Arabs and the formation of a bi-national Arab-Jewish state in Palestine, this week announced that he has come to the conclusion that no agreement with Arab leaders is possible.

WHY I AM AGAINST COLLEGE SORORITIES

CRITICISM OF THE CASTE SYSTEM

Editor's Note: The following article was prepared for our New Year issue and was written by a young Indianapolis Jewish matron. Readers are invited to express their views on the same subject.

T WAS a "good" Jewish so-rority and our classmates envied us our bids to the first rush tea. Beatrice, Sheila, and I were excited of course, but not surprised. We'd been ringleaders in our high school crowd, and had expected to be asked to join a college sorority.

And then one day, Jean stopped me in the corridor. "I hear you're being rushed," she said. "Uh-huh," I agreed lightly and then I noticed her face. It looked hurt and bitter.

"I guess they thought I wasn't good enough."

"Oh no," I assured her, "They can add only a few new girls each term, and I suppose they just discovered us first," I ended lamely.

And then I began to think.

Why hadn't Jean been asked to join? She certainly had as much right as we to expect an invi-Her scholarship was tation. good. She was attractive, popular; she even had a talent for writing. How did the sorority choose?

At the fourth rush tea, when it became obvious that I was definitely to be asked to join. I cornered the rush chairman and asked her. She was vague.

"Oh we want girls who will be tops-nice looking, snappy dressers, popular, smart, you know-

"Well do you know Jean?" I asked. "She's a swell girl, and talented, too."

"Oh, she's O.K. didn't happen to choose her. This is a private social group and we have a right to choose whomever we wish to be a part

She was right, of course, except that sororities in our colleges have ceased to be a private affair. They are part of an organized caste system. Either you are selected, and are "organized," one of the 400, or you are completely out of one whole phase of college life. The advantages of sorority life have been so overrated and so well advertised that too many girls go to school with the feeling that they must make a sorority or be considered failures. That is not surprising when you consider that these girls are at the age when it is important that they look, and act, and think just like the rest of the crowd. If three girls are organized and the fourth is left out, she is heart-sick when she is 17 years old.

And there is nothing she can do about it. There is nothing definite she can work toward with the feeling that when she achieves a certain degree of knowledge or skill, she can become one of the group. No. Because "they just didn't happen to choose her" she is to remain for her entire college career, on the outside looking in.

It wouldn't be so important sorority membership were not made out to be the height of social status which a girl must attain to preserve her self-

Unless she is utterly foolish, she joins other clubs, and finds activity and companionship, but since she tried and failed to make a sorority, she retains a feeling that she isn't good enough, or more likely, that she is being unjustly discriminated against. Neither attitude makes for a well-adjusted personality

. It is an especially vicious practice for Jewish girls to say, This is the favored group. You may join and you may not." They are well enough acquainted with the unpleasantness of religious discrimination so that one would imagine they would not build new barriers, and have an in-group and out-group among themselves, based on their limited knowledge of people. Often the very girls who are left out, turn up later as leaders in the community, but not before they have been unnecessarily hurt.

And what about the girls who are admitted? What do they gain actually in return for the expense entailed in sorority membership? A pleasant home to live in, where there is a chapter house, companionship, dates with fraternity men (who in many colleges may not date unorganized girls), dances and parties.

Nowadays the dormitories are beautiful and comfortable. The Union Buildings on many campuses provide luxurious social atmosphere for affairs. The popular, clever, attractive girls sought out by the sororities would certainly have no difficulty finding companionship and dates, while the shy wallflowers who need help in making friends are not asked to join the sorority.

I am sure I shall be answered by girls who will tell me that there is an intangible feeling of lovalty and integrity, and good sportsmanship that is gained from sorority life, but should those undeniably good qualities be limited to relations with the picked few sorority sisters? Why can't you be loyal to the whole university? Why can't you be interested in the wel-fare of all the students? You go to university to learn how to live in a big world, you know.

No, I'm afraid that the only thing that the college girl could not have in equal measure if there were no such thing as a sorority, is the feeling that she is one of the socially elite, that she has achieved the social ambition of college girls. And it isn't even as simple as that. It must be a "good" sorority creme de la creme.

Is that the attitude we want formed in our girls at the impressionable age which will determine the kind of women they will become Do we want to train in our universities women who will use their abilities and energies only in exclusive clubs and for causes with prestige?

I do not mean to imply that every girl who goes to university becomes either a snob or a frustrated personality. Many sorority members are completely democratic. And many college girls would never consider joining a social sorority. They do not require the organization's aid in providing their activities and choosing their friends. They do not want to be limited.

Outside of their classroom time, they join music groups, debating societies, Hillel—organizations where their acceptance depends upon their ability to add to the group and their cooperation, not upon the arbitrary decision of four or five young girls.

The Universities themselves recognize the situation, and encourage the formation of activities groups rather than caste social groups, because they realize that as long as the opportunity for snobbery exists, there are those who will take advantage of it and those who will be hurt by it.

Hillel Directors Make Reports

By RABBI HERMAN POLLACK B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation Indiana University

. In the fifth year may ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you more richly the increase thereof . . ."

(Leviticus 19:25)

THE B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at Indiana University has just completed its fourth year of activity. Thanks to the devotion of the pioneers of Hillel on this campus, and to the untiring efforts of B'nai B'rith leaders and friends in this state, during this period Hillel has become a center for the Jewish students at Indiana and a part of the University Hillel has reached the maturity to be called an institution these figures. with its own history, tradition and ideals.

When one speaks of Hillel as the religious, cultural, and social tions appear to be for their own center of the Jewish students on good. It is therefore well to ask: the campus, it is no wishful thinking or vague generality. This is adequately illustrated in the factual report sent to the B'nai B'rith lodges of the Indiana-Kentucky State Association by the Hillel Advisory Board. At this

A REGULAR FRIDAY EVENING HILLEL DISCUSSION GROUP

Students of today are critical; no program can be superimposed on them, not even if the intengood. It is therefore well to ask: In what way does Hillel help the youth of today to fulfill their own wishes, to meet their prob-lems, and to prepare them for the world they live in after they leave the campus?

Young people are wearied by the cleavages and divisions in the world. They are eager for unity, for men to live in brotherhood. They therefore react very favorably to Hillel's nonsectarian approach, of embracing all students regardless of their point of view, be they Reform, Conservative, or

From their acquaintance with the history of the development of our civilization, students have learned to appreciate the cul-tures of many groups. They are anxious to become acquainted with the creative, dynamic aspects of Jewish life. Hillel serves as the avenue whereby the cultural values of the Jewish people can be made accessible.

Young people also want to be useful in society. Hillel encour-ages them to participate in communal projects while they are in An active Hillelite was recently made First Aid instruc-tor at the Military Institute of the University. A group of students help sponsor the activities of the Bloomington Day Nursery, recreation center for sunderprivileged children. The other day our Hillel office received two letters from girls who were graduated last May. They are now in U. S. O. activity, and point out that their previous organizational time there is no need to repeat experience at Hillel has given them the background to function more efficiently in U. S. O.

Hillel is looking forward to the new season with great interest, as offering greater possibilities for productive work. The students are enthusiastic over the B'nai B'rith Pilgrimage to Indiana University planned for Sunday, Nov. 15. The Pilgrimage will give the lodges of the Indiana-Kentuckky State Association an opportunity to become better acquainted with the activity of Hillel and observe how Hillel functions on the campus. A wellrounded program is being planned for the occasion. We are happy to announce that Dr. A. L. Sachar, National Director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations, will be the guest speaker.

As we are about to celebrate Yom Kippur, and as Hillel is making preparations to start its fifth year on the Indiana campus, let us hope that the New Year will find us increasingly productive, and that the fruits of our labor will be enjoyed even more fully than in the past.

The report by Rabbi Meyer H. Simon of the Purdue Counselorship will be printed next week.

committee which includes Prof. Zelig Brodetsky, Dr. Ignacy Schwartzbart, Samuel Zygelbaum and representatives of the World Jewish Congress and the Agudas Israel, will supervise sending the parcels, it was learned. The Governments of the United States and Canada may permit similar arrangements now that the British authorities have finally reached an understanding with Jewish representatives, it is hoped here.

Many Soldiers At Services Here

Several hundred men in the service attended the Rosh Hashonah services in the eight synagogues here. It is estimated that approximately 100 of these soldiers and sailors also availed themselves of the personal hospitality extended to them by Jewish families in Indianapolis, who invited them for meals and lodging during the holiday week-end. Similar arrangements are being made for Yom Kippur.

Chaplain A. G. Myrice of the Finance School at Fort Benjamin Harrison will speak at the Friday evening services in the Post Chapel tonight.

Sam Iszak, Indianapolis policeman, recently sent the Kirshbaum Center-USO Club a gift that will be warmly welcomed by the many servicemen who enjoy the swimming pool there: several dozen pairs of fine wool swim trunks. A Wartime Request From Your Long Distance Operator

Please

AVOID UNNECESSARY CALLS...BE BRIEF

★ May we count on your co-operation in giving Uncle Sam first call on the telephone lines?

War has jammed Long Distance facilities with the greatest flood of calls in history, particularly to far-away points outside the state. Ordinarily the Telephone Company would build new lines to take care of the greater loads, but that would take materials needed for weapons to win the war.

So we are asking you to think twice before you telephone to busy cities across the country. Please don't call Washington, D. C., or other centers of war activity except on urgent business. Avoid making any Long Distance calls unless they are really necessary . . . and make the essential ones as brief as possible.

We'll do our level best, and we're confident you'll gladly give the help we askso that when Uncle Sam reaches for the telephone his calls will go through without delay!

AL SEGAL Speaks On

Who's Zilch

DEAR MR. SEGAL: Please tell us more about this Mr. Zilch who is frequently mentioned in your column. Where does he live? What does he look like? What sort of a family life has he? He confuses me. Sometimes he seems a silly sort, at other times there appears to be considerable merit in the man. Let's have the real low-down on him.A.T.T., Philadelphia.

I am surprised to hear that A.T.T. doesn't know Mr. Zilch who is a neighbor of his on Fantasia Lane which runs west and gets swallowed up in the sunset. If A.T.T. will walk twenty-three steps down Fantasia Lane and then cross straight over he will come to Mr. Zilch's modest house. It is the one with the box hedge and the petunias that grow along the border of the lawn. There is a mazuza on

If the time is toward evening Mr. Zilch will be on the lawn with his hose. He applies himself to the ritual of the hose as soon as dinner He is punctilious about this; he must be through with the hose in time for the news broadcast that at 7:15 takes him around the

The time he stretches himself on the couch in the living room and tunes in, Mr. Zilch considers the best moment of his day. The couch takes his bones and composes them softly. The cushion under his head caresses his mind which is troubled enough: The way things are going in the world . . . the way life has fallen into fluttering tatters for people like him so late in their years; it had been like a comfortable old .the dreadful things that have fallen on Jews; there was a long time in Mr. Zilch's life when being a Jew was nothing to worry about.

The soft couch takes hold of him gently and lulls his aching senses. Zilch lies there like one suspended in an immense hammock that swings between Australia and England, as he listens to the world-wide broadcast. His life has been between these places most of the time since we got into the war. Australia is where his older boy has been sent; the younger one is in England.

His wife has said that maybe they should give up the house they're in, now that the boys have gone and the two girls are married. It's so full of poignant vacancy, so loud with the echoes of the children's laughter; the echoes seem to be in all the corners.

When the world-broadcast is over the announcers come in impudently with the baseball Mr. Zilch tunes them out resentfully. The hell-with that. It's almost insulting. What's the boy doing in Australia? What's the one in England doing? Who cares what Brooklyn did

Zilch shuts his eyes. Thank goodness, he thinks, there's the comfort of this couch left. It keeps standing in its old place by the window. Almost everything else in the world has slipped out of place, as after a great earthquake. The comfortable, safe old things of human existence lie heaped up in a horrible jumble, and life itself has become only a dime a dozen. It's like the old books his wife swept out and hand-ed over to the second hand book man when she was cleaning house last spring. He paid her a dime a dozen for them. They were laughter and love and labor and dreams being swept away at a dime a dozen.

But God's still in his old place, too, Mr. Zilch thinks with a sudden pang of his conscience. He has kept on believing in God, despite that from time to time he discovers himself asking, "Where is God in all this?" and "Why isn't He doing something about it?"

In these moments Zilch feels convicted of blasphemy. He drives the impious questions from his mind. Yes, he says, it's a sin to ask these questions. He tries to think of evidences of God he has witnessed. Well, there is the law of God in the perfection of his petunias this summer. He remembers that he started them from ugly, little brown seeds in the early spring-time and they have grown up to be these lovely flowers on his lawn. He can't deny God in this miracle.

God, he thinks, will come through in time, as he did with the flowers. He remembers things he learned in the religious school? The wrongdoers do get what's coming to them in the long run. That's the experience of human life. It's not just something printed in the school books. From thinking on God Zilch comes somehow to the matter of being a Jew. The two ideas are pretty well mixed up together in his mind. He is always conscious of a religious accent when he thinks of the quality of being Jewish.

Despite what he is told, despite the many hands that pluck at his coat sleeves "Mr. Zilch, come along with us," or "Mr. Zilch, you can be a real Jew only if you take up our way", he is well satisfied with his own concept of being Jewish. His idea is that to be a Jew is to be one who is obligated by principles of his ancient faith to walk on the highest way of personal and social conduct, and that's all there's to it. Why complicate the matter with all these extra-curricular activities? Mr. Zilch feels irritated by the high pressure salesmen who try to sell him a large variety of ways of being a Jew.

He believes that if he goes in a righteous way of life and deals justly and gets along decently with people and follows in all things the paths of his Jewish teaching he is being Jewish enough. It's the way of all men of good will.

Mr. Zilch is impatient with Jewish leaders who try to make of him a special kind of a person with a special divinity and a special destiny. He thinks it's almost time for the brotherhood and brotherhood falls short if some of the family think of themselves as being essentially different or special.

Mr. Zilch hopes for a world in which being a Jew will be no special identity. A Jew will be just one of the people in a world which it takes all kinds to make. There are people enough in the world who would viciously set him apart and why should he acquiesce? He must keep himself ready for the brotherhood.

On these meditations Mr. Zilch descends from his couch to the happy amnesia of slum-

Yes, this is the authentic portraits of Mr. Zilch. If A.T.T. of Philadelphia will consult his mirror he will make a startling discovery. 'Oh, I'll be damned if Zilch isn't almost a dead ringer for me He is me!" . . . Right! Mr. Zilch is the image of a great many of us plain people who have no professional ordination.

The editor's chair,

I was so infuriated the other day by a discussion of the Negro problem by a group of Jewish people, a discussion in which I could not take part, that when it came time for me to present my particular subject - The Jewish Post arranging a sort of contest among the local Jewish groups to see which could get the largest number of its members to give blood to the Red Cross Blood Bank-that I did so poorly I let myself be beaten down on the age-old assimilationist plaint-"Mah Yomru Hagoyim," "What will the Gentiles Say."

I hold no brief for the project I was trying to arrange for The Post, because I know I was right, but this Negro problem, discussed as if it were something beneath the Jew, and only to be considered in the light as it might possibly affect the Jew, that got me. Not ten minutes before one of the Jewish men was saying that certain non-Jews were perfectly willing to deal with Jews in business or civic enterprises, but that the relationship practically never went so far as to include social interchange. Then in speaking of the Negro problem, these same men in trying to type a certain Negro leader said something about him being willing to play tennis with you or being willing to eat at your house. In other words the non-Jews were held up to criticism because they would not condone a social relationship, and here were the Jews doing exactly the same thing to the Negroes.

And don't let me hear anyone saying that the position of the Jew is different from that of the Negro.

God, who made the Jew, for what reason it often taxes me to figure out, also made the Negro. And it is high time that our Jewish leadership begin to understand this. We Jews quake with rapture when a non-Jewish leader takes up for us, but have you noticed any Jews taking an interest in the Negro problem locally. Negroes are discriminated against in a degree which has rarely been known by the Jew, and yet only in a few isolated cases, such as that of Julius Rosenwald and a few others, has the

Major Mantel's Peculiarity

THE POST has always had a fond regard for Sam Mantel, now Major Sam Mantel, but along with many others, especially among the older leadership of B'nai B'rith, this paper has long known that he was obsessed with a peculiar streak. This may not be the time to speak about Major Mantel, especially when he has no opportunity of answering, but The Post will not be bound by convention.

If Major Mantel had kept his own counsel and not attempted to foist his principles on others his awkward and revolutionary beliefs would not be embarrassing him today.

But no, Mr. Mantel, together with this funny characteristic, also had another funny streak. He believed in speaking out in public. It is a sort of honesty not found very widely today, and when it does appear is such a novelty that it makes people uncomfortable. On two memorable occasions in the recent past, Mr. Mantel's peculiarity, a sort of belief in democracy and democratic rule, got him into opposition with some of the men who tolerate no opposition and who call all opposition by the term which in their opinion carries the most opprobium, namely "radicals".

That Mr. Mantel, although he held the office of president of District No. 2 of Grand Lodge of B'nai B'rith, and graced that office well, should be classed with this group of democrats or "radicals" shows how wrong he was, and should be a lesson to others who believe they can speak out in behalf of changes.

The first occasion was when, like a thunder-bolt at an otherwise ordinary meeting, he recommended that the nominating committee of the local lodge of B'nai B'rith report at least two names for each office. Mr. Mantel won a temporary victory then, although he was not present at all, at the next meeting when the matter was voted upon, and passed by the narrow margin of one vote. And deservedly, The Post is sure, this procedure stood on the books for only the shortest time, for soon it was found that this "radical" move had been illegally introduced, and could have been made only by constitutional amendment.

The other occasion may turn out to be more favorable for Mr. Mantel, but its acceptance is still in abeyance. At South Bend at the annual convention of the Indiana-Kentucky State Association when the going got tough for the people who felt that the membership as a whole should be allowed to choose their officers, the matter up for decision was a recommendation by the resolutions committee that hereafter the nominating committee "must" bring in the names of at least two men for the office of vice-presidents. Mr. Mantel had nothing, The Post knows for certain, to do with the introduction of this "democratic" change, but as mentioned above, his penchant for speaking out got the best of him, and he demurred on the floor of the convention when a move was made to table the discussion, which everyone knew would have been an easy way to kill it. Mr. Mantel said the item was of real significance, and although he took no stand one way or another, he merely protested that it should be thrashed out then and there.

This was a terrible mistake, and it is hoped that Mr. Mantel as he gets older will learn better. This gave the "radicals" the opportunity for which they had been hoping, an open vote right on the floor. The voting was 56 to 8 for the recommendation, and now look what had been done. Instead of reporting only one name for each office, the nominating committee, in direct divergence from twenty years of classic tradition, now has to bring in the names of two men for each of the offices of the three vice-presidents.

But that is not all. Mr. Mantel has another idea. He says he got it from the Columbus, O., lodge of B'nai B'rith, where just before the voting for each office, the candidates arose, and without boasting told how many lodge meetings they had attended, what committees they had been a working member of, how many members they had brought into the lodge, and certain other items which might show directly whether or not they deserved the office. Mr. Mantel would like to see this innovation introduced at B'nai B'rith elections. He believes that in this way, those who aspire to office will not be able to slide through without doing the job, and knowing they will be called upon to recite their efforts in behalf of the organization before elevation through the chairs, they will see that their tasks are done.

Mr. Mantel is away, serving the forces of the nation. But The Post cannot be constrained. Any man who believes the way Mr. Mantel does should be held up to public censure, if for no other reason, that the errors of his ways may be known to all, and others will not be led astray. Just imagine what would happen to our organizations if the members thought they might have to compete for office, and work for their group in order to aspire to leadership.

Polish Jews .....

Publisher of The Jewish Transcript of Seattle, Wash., for 18 years, Herman Horowitz Turns Over Paper to Community.—Continuous ill health and the disruption of general business occasioned by our country's entrance into world conflict has made impossible the further publication of the Jewish Transcript by me as a private enterprise.

It was with deep regret that I was compelled to face this conclusion as for 18 years I had conducted the paper. During that time the Seattle Jewish community has grown and developed religiously and culturally and I had hoped that I had played no unworthy part in the city's communal growth.

I take this occasion to notify the Jewish people of Seattle that I have transferred my entire holdings in the paper, to a group of public-spirited citizens who henceforth will conduct the paper as a non-profit community enterprise.

The revivification of The Transcript under such conditions meets with my entire approval and for the new management I have the highest hopes that it will serve the best interests of Seattle Jewry.

I wish to take this occasion, from the depths of my heart, to express my gratitude to the many, who at all times have been loyal to the paper and who have given me their support and comfort.

Unity of purpose, harmony and an all out effort as Americans and Jews are the watchwords of the hour and to this the new paper is highly dedicated. That abundant success will crown the objectives of The Transcript is the sincerest wish of the man who now lays down the pen and permanently retires from Jewish journalism in Seattle.

20 YEARS AGO By Jewish Telegraphic Agency

WASHINGTON-President Harding greeted the Jews of America on the occasion of Rosh Hashanah, stating that the year that had just concluded "was peculiarly notable in Jewish annals. It has seen the definite assurance to the Jewish people that their long aspirations for reestablishment of Jewish nationality in the Homeland of this great people is to be definitely realized." The resolution expressing the American government's endorsement of a Jewish National Home in Palestine has passed both Houses of Congress and has been sent to the President who is expected to sign it.

JERUSALEM — In a brilliant ceremony on the Mount of Olives Sir Herbert Samuel was sworn in as High Commissioner for Palestine. In his address Sir Herbert expressed the hope that "after twenty-five years" the Mandatory power will leave Palestine where there will be "a prosperous people, the Arab and Jewish cultures flourishing side by side."

GENEVA—A petition drawing the attention of the League of Nations to the precarious position of the Jews in Hungary was submitted to the League Council, which is now in session here considering the application of Hungary for entrance into the League. It is demanded that Hungary pledge fair treatment of minorities before being admitted.

NEW YORK—Max Warburg, noted Hamburg banker, arrived here on board the "Resolute" in the company of his brother, Felix Warburg. In a statement to the press the latter, who is chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee, revealed that the JDC has been helping to feed 2,000,000 daily in Russia. Thousands of orphans are being cared for, he said.

voice of the Jew been raised for justice for his fellowman of the Negro race.

The talk about the Negro problem finally led around to where one of the more-socially minded of the discussants declared that the Negro had been vilified and unjustly given the blame for the happenings on Indiana ave., and that they weren't given a chance to make a living, and so forth. But this liberal attitude soon got it in the neck, when one of the others made the brilliant observation that we have plenty of instances of discrimination against the Jew to worry about, and couldn't take on the problem of the Negro.

The Negro problem will be solved when the Negro is given complete equality for what the individual Negro happens to be. That time will see the Negro given social equality. The man or group which has the courage to get up now and say that the Negro in the United States should be given social equality, will be like Isaiah, a prophet, like the leadership of the Jews some 2500 years ago.

Freedom of the Press

Great Britain was not as truly democratic as the U.S. A. and so Well, when he had finished expounding his supposed knowledge of those subjects, I, a guest, much to my regret, had to deny most of his statements, for they were unfounded and misleading to his listeners who apparently were as ill-informed on those subjects as he was. As a result of this incident, I am forced to doubt if the members of Jewry in Indianapolis are well informed on the subject of the Palestinian problem and situation in particular, so I propose to deal with this matter fully and as thoroughly as the average Britisher under-stands and feels towards it, based on what is now historical facts.

I think the easiest way to give a clear picture is to consider first the separate position at the end of the last war of each element in the Palestinian situation in itself, without reference to the others.

To begin, the Near Eastern campaign of 1914-18 was an inevitable development of Allied strategy. The Allies and Great Britain in particular, could not allow the Turks, allied as they were with the Germans, to threaten those vital communications of the Suez Canal, and the eastern shores of the Red Sea. Allenby was ordered to advance into Palestine, which he did in the late part of 1917, while the desert Arabs, led by Emir Feisal with the aid of that mysterious but gallant man "Lawrence of Arabia," pushed the Turks northwards, and entered Damascus in the autumn of 1918.

Now, after the war, Palestine became very important and Brit-ish security for her "Life-Line" to India and the Far East still demanded control of the east bank of the canal; development of imperial air communications made Palestine a potential link in air lines to India and the Far East; the motor road across the desert to Baghdad could be reached and the oil pipe-line from Iraquian wells at Kirkuk debouched at the Port of Haifa, which was also one of the best naval stations in the eastern are analogous to those which, in the past, have led to the British control of Gibraltar, Malta, Singapore, etc. It is a vital link in the communications of a world-cannot be indifferent to its fate. In old days she might have annexed the country after conquest. As we all know, she obtained it as a Mandate from the League of Nations.

Now from this point it was es sential that the country should be stable and prosperous, for a weak and divided country offers endless opportunity for intrigue, and there were and are several Powers only too willing to fish in troubled waters.

Now in 1919 there was no such thing, so far as its inhabitants were concerned, as a Palestinian nationality, in the sense in which there is Portuguese nationality giving fairly clear indications of the natural areas of the Portuguese State. The present fron-tiers of Palestine, while they are more or less familiar to a Jew or an Englishman, were only fixed after the Versailles Conference. The country formed part of two Turkish provinces, and its in-habitants were just part of that vast Arab section of the Turkish Empire which stretched from the Mediterranean to Persia. They did not think of themselves as Palestinians, but as Syrians who were part of the great Moslem world and part of the Arab people.

Hence, on the one hand, they identified their situation with that of other Arab States in the Near East, and, on the other, Moslems all over the world were interested in their circumstances, as Jerusalem is the third holiest city in the Moslem world.

In 1922, when the first census was taken of the present territory, the Arab population numbered some 664,000, of whom 73, 000 were Christians. More than half the Moslem Arabs were peasants, cultivating about one half of the soil of Palestine by methods which had altered little since bible days. The main reasons for this situation lay in the poverty of the soil and the poverty of the peasant; and each reacted on the other, keeping the unfortunate inhabitants in an almost permanent state of indebtedness. The Arab was neither lazy nor improvident; his iron-shod wooden plough, his sickle for reaping, were the most effect-Mediterranean. These form the basic interest in the country, and Improved cultivation and the extension of the area cultivated wide empire, and Great Britain the land belonged to a small number of landlords, of whom some lived outside the country and were entirely uninterested in their tenants as long as they received their rents. Of what was left much was held communally, but even where a village owned its own land there was no inducement to the individual to improve his soil, since after a couple of crops it passed into other hands.

> A tenth of the Moslem Arabs were still wandering shepherds, living in tribes, and grazing their flocks over wide but vaguely defined areas. There was no really accurate land register, a situation which caused considerable difficulties in the early years of the British administration, and now, has not been entirely remedied.

> The Christian Arabs lived mostly in the towns, and provided a high percentage of the total professional, official, and artisan class. Rich Moslems are almost invariably landowners, a rich Christian often a merchant or official. The urban proletariat was small, for large towns were few, and commercial or industrial life extremely backward.

> The Jews are admittedly the most ancient and the most recent of the settled inhabitants of Palestine; and, while it is true that the circumstances connected with their dramatic return to their "National Home" are the cause of most of the present complications, it is also true that Jewish enterprise provides by far the most interesting part of the story of the last twenty years in Palestine.

Throughout the last two thousand years the country has never wholly lacked Jewish inhabitants. Sometimes they were to be numbered by hundreds, sometimes by tens of thousands. They came to "the land of Israel" to lament the fallen state of their nation, to bury themselves in its religious life and history, or to die there in its holy ground. It is only in the second half of the nineteenth century that vigorous young Jews began to return, and to live, by cultivating that holy ground. Out of this the Zionist Movement was born. Persecution in Russia and in western Europe stimulated it, and in 1914 there were already more than 10,000 Jewish settlers owning or cultivating about 90,-000 acres of Palestinian soil. At the same time those colonists were a small minority of the actual Jewish population of the country in 1914. Most of the population of Jerusalem was Jewish, though most were of the old-fashioned and religious type who did nothing to cultivate the soil. Similar groups lived in Hebron and in the north, but side by side with them there was springing up an urban population of artisans and traders possessed by the same ideals which had created the colonies, the rebuilding of a national home in the ancestral country.

But under Turkish rule life was uncertain, and their position was never secure, and it was with relief that they hailed the coming of the British and the pass-ing of the country into British control. From the area controlled by the British many colonists volunteered and took part in sweeping the Turks out of the country. It was typical of the idealism of their whole outlook that, within actual sound of the booming of the guns, the foundation stones of a Hebrew University were laid outside Jerusalem.

In my next letter, I will con-tinue by dealing with "War-time Promises, Etc."
